

In thermodynamics, Temperature (T) is a state function because it doesn't matter the path you take to get from one temperature to another, the only thing that matters is the difference (ΔT) between the initial (T_i) and final (T_f) temperatures.

